The difference in the parameters may be related to the different physiological properties of the peri-implant tissue. The evaluation of the peri-implant tissues should be performed during follow-up because of the highly variable results of clinical examinations with relatively small standard deviation. Nevertheless, the evaluation of peri-implant mucosa may be difficult because it is difficult to detect the recession of the mucosa on the peri-implant soft tissues, and because of the atrophy or hypertrophy of the mucosa itself \[[@B18]\]. In the present study, no significant change in the levels of IL-6 was observed at different time points after the operation. In contrast, the level of IL-6 in the GCF decreased significantly at different time points. We inferred that the reduction of the IL-6 level in GCF was associated with the reduction of IL-6 in peri-implant mucosa. The limitations of this study include the small sample size and single center data, which may influence the results. Further studies are needed to prove the relationship between GCF and peri-implant mucosa of implantations. 5. Conclusions {#sec5} ========== In conclusion, our results show that there is a correlation between the levels of IL-6 in GCF and peri-implant mucosa. A correlation also exists between the levels of IL-6 in GCF and clinical parameters. However, there are differences between the levels of IL-6 in peri-implant mucosa and GCF at different time points. Thus, we hypothesize that the correlation between the IL-6 levels in GCF and peri-implant mucosa may be specific and can be considered as a novel biomarker to monitor implantations
