Cyclosporine A in the treatment of severe acute graft-versus-host disease. Eleven adult patients with steroid-refractory severe acute graft-versus-host disease (GVHD) were treated with cyclosporine A (CyA). Four patients had skin involvement, two had diarrhea, and seven had liver involvement. Median CyA dose was 3.2 mg/kg/d. All 11 patients improved, as judged by at least one of the following criteria: liver toxicity, gastrointestinal tract toxicity, overall clinical status, or reduction of plasma bilirubin levels. Two patients had gastrointestinal bleeding at median CyA doses of 3.5 and 4.5 mg/kg/d. Overall survival was 75% at a median follow-up of 16 months (range 3.5 to 58 months). This large experience shows that CyA alone is a useful therapy for patients with steroid-refractory, severe acute GVHD and that gastrointestinal bleeding usually occurs at doses more than 5 mg/kg/d.Response to a nationwide survey of seven leading pelvic floor surgeons (with and without postgraduate training) in the United States. To determine the current practice of the seven leading experts in the United States in the diagnosis and treatment of pelvic floor disorders and their opinions regarding the need for and role of postgraduate training in this area. A mailed survey was sent to the seven leading experts in the United States in the diagnosis and treatment of pelvic floor disorders. Each received it from at least one of their peers. The response rate was 33%. Most (96%) were in private practice. Over 80% reported that they had received postgraduate training in the evaluation and/or treatment of their patients with pelvic floor disorders. There were wide variations in specific programs of training. The majority felt that pelvic floor disorders would be more appropriately managed in the primary care setting. Seventy percent (7/10) of the responding experts indicated that one of the major failings in their current training was not adequately covering pelvic floor dysfunction. There was a high degree of agreement between reported attitudes towards the training of their postgraduate trainees and the level of training they themselves had received. Their own training recommendations reflected a combination of subject areas. The seven leading experts in the United States in the diagnosis and treatment of pelvic floor disorders were generally trained in several areas, including female pelvic medicine, anatomy, gynecology, urogynecology, psychology, and related disciplines. There is an important need for improved postgraduate training
