United States will send their best military minds in support of global operations against the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL). Speaking to Navy Times, the senior defense officials confirmed that the Department of Defense is preparing to dispatch a "strike group" of frigates and other armed ships to the eastern Mediterranean for anti-ISIL operations. The announcement comes in response to a previous request from Turkish authorities, the officials added, as a growing diplomatic flap between the U.S. and Turkey appears to be growing. In response to a query by Navy Times, officials confirmed that the U.S. has sent an "unnamed strike group" to the Mediterranean as part of a "pre-planned" deployment. "The strike group consists of warships from the U.S. Navy's 6th Fleet, and is based out of the Norfolk Naval Base in Virginia," the officials told Navy Times. They added that the strike group will also be augmented by U.S. Air Force jets, and "may carry out strike operations" in conjunction with the Navy's destroyers. While there is little information about the composition or planned operations of the strike group in the Mediterranean, a previous report from Navy Times shed more light on a possible Turkish role. A report from November said that U.S. officials were preparing to use Turkish-based anti-ISIL proxies in anti-ISIL operations, and Turkish military officers had met with U.S. officials to discuss the proposals. The plan called for Turkey's small fleet to bomb Islamic State targets in Syria, while U.S. warplanes would work with Ankara's ground forces to liberate Mosul and
