Later, contributions from other developers lead to the creation of the most famous game engine used today by millions of users across the globe. Overview The engine was developed for Mozilla's Gecko layout engine. It is designed to minimize the learning curve of those familiar with other well-known rendering and animation technology, such as Unity, Flash and Maya. Its shader design is based on the Mozilla Gecko's GLSL shader language, which is part of the OpenGL Shading Language specification, to make it easy to port shaders to the engine. In November 2018, the Gecko project ceased development for the W3C's WebGL standard, so its development stopped in 2011. Usage The engine supports multiple platforms, including the PC, mobile phones, tablets and most recent graphics cards. Developers can now use the engine to create web and mobile games, and many popular games were built with the engine, including; World of Tanks, The Witcher 3, Atomic Throne, The Harvesting. In 2012, the engine was ported to the Arduino platform. A C++ library is also available for Arduino. In August 2012, Unity Technologies started using the Gecko Technology to power their official indie game development framework and integration with Unity has allowed many developers to rapidly create full featured games to be deployed to multiple platforms, including web, iPhone, Android, PC, Mac, Windows and Linux OS. Since February 2014, a WebGL plugin is available in the engine for use in web browsers. On March 24, 2014, the WebGL plugin for Windows became the only version to fully support all major hardware video cards and operating systems. History Maximilian Müller Maximilian Müller is the original creator of the Gecko Technology. He was born in Germany, but currently lives in Sweden. He has been building engines for 10 years, but since 2010 his main focus has been on Gecko and WebGL. Sebastian Hammer In 2012, he joined Maximilian's Gecko Technology team. He moved to Sweden in 2013. His main focus is in the development of the WebGL plugin. Jesper Lindkvist Jesper is a contributor to the Gecko Technology

Looking forward to more discussion on this forum. Let us get to it. Send me your email and I will send you the info on how to get it. I got SDA from a lady here who gave me her friend's sim card of T-Mobile USA. Her friend was a lawyer in New York. There is a forum discussion on this topic here. I sent you my email, but I will PM you, just to be sure you get it. bfcnanime 04-02 06:14 PM I have posted this for you to look at already. Your letter was sent and on Monday (2/27), I received the USPS letter titled "Customs Data Retrieval of Entry Summary" that says that they will be mailing a Visa number to my ADDRESS. They have verified that it is my address, so I don't know why they wouldn't mail the Visa. I was never notified of that request. I also sent the form on line in order to process the Visa number. Do you have any ideas as to what could be causing this??? thanks, Jure Nayan 12-20 07:35 PM Where can I ask the BB to scan a receipt of the credit card used to make the purchase? We will need the receipt number. Besides, that receipt is a good deal for the service you provided the guy. There are a few things that could have happened here. 1. BB or TC agent has the wrong number. So you need the original receipt to verify with BB that its correct. 2. There could be a mix up with the billing info 3e33713323
