First and foremost, you'll be working in a program that does not behave like a traditional notepad, it is simply a developer tool. Therefore, you will not be able to use it to create mind maps if you are used to simply writing down quick ideas in notepad, and you will also have to get used to it as the app's interface is quite different from what you would expect to use. Some of these factors include the fact that Heimer will ask you to give it information so that it can create mind maps, and it will ask you to indicate certain details. You may encounter so-called "blank mind maps" or mind maps with just a certain type of node, therefore you may feel that certain features are missing. To better handle your information, Heimer will ask you to explicitly indicate the type of node you are creating, this means that you will need to specify the color of the node you want to create, the label you want it to have and the kind of node it is.
