Nigeria will not cut itself off from a large market because of US sanctions against North Korea. That's a senior official's response to the country being named by the Trump administration as one of 28 nations that were specifically targeted by the new sanctions. The move was aimed at significantly reducing Pyongyang's access to international markets, including halting its oil imports, on the same day that North Korea threatened to resume long-range missile testing. US Secretary of State Rex Tillerson says the new sanctions will "increase the maximum pain for North Korea's leadership" and will "harden" international prohibitions against Pyongyang's development of ballistic missile capabilities. Tillerson: "The new sanctions will not only significantly
