Q: "Ich arbeite im Büro" - is there a less colloquial way of saying "I work in the office"? When I'm asking a person about their work I commonly say: "Ich arbeite im Büro" - but is there another way of saying that? I'm not super familiar with using different titles of offices to indicate where a person works. For example, in German we would say "Ich arbeite im Vertretungsraum" or "Ich arbeite im Finanz-Büro" (since in both scenarios the person has an office). While I'm sure there are plenty of colloquial ways of saying "I work in an office", I'm wondering if there's a simple way of translating "I work in the office" with German? Thanks!

A: Wenn es um den Büro bezieht, fällt es mir sofort auf, "Ich bei der [die] Firma arbeite" in dem sinngemäßen Satz "Ich bin in der Firma" reicht sogar schon aus.

A: "Ich arbeite im Büro" in your case sounds fine. Büro can be translated to office just fine. But other offices might be more specific. I would use Unternehmerzentrum as it is the location of a company that I am working with (Wirtschaftsuniversität) rather than the company's location for other purposes. But in general, it is always important to specify the office.

Q: Add items to an IEnumerable returned by repository method I have the following repository method and it is returning an IEnumerable of objects.

Evaluation of nonlinear cavity effects in the dependence of cavity loss on the filling time. Our results show that the dependence of the cavity loss on the gas-filling time in dielectric cavities can be explained by a model of a nonlinear cavity resonance consisting of two linear modes with different frequencies, but their quality factors being the same. This "mode-coupling" model is in a good agreement with the experiments performed on cavities of different geometry and materials, but it gives us also an explanation of some
