Cyclic nucleotide phosphodiesterases (PDEs) play a key role in the regulation of intracellular signal transduction and are therefore potential therapeutic targets in a broad range of disease states. We determined the structure of PDE1A, a cyclic nucleotide PDE expressed in the testes of mammals and in the central nervous system of insects. The x-ray crystal structure of PDE1A is closely related to that of the catalytic core of phosphodiesterases, but a unique cytoplasmic domain that links the catalytic core to the cell surface is found in PDE1A. PDE1A represents a new super

Literature suggests that, in brain-dead organ donors, a continuous supply of antioxidants may improve renal function and increase graft utilization. However, its administration to this population poses risks due to early administration, potential adverse effects, and the considerable variation in protocols. This review is aimed at assessing the impact of antioxidants on renal function and graft utilization of brain-dead organ donors. A systematic review was performed on MEDLINE, Web of Science, and Cochrane Library to identify randomized clinical trials that administered antioxidants in donor management. A meta-analysis was performed to assess the impact of antioxidants on graft utilization and renal function. The search yielded seven studies (eight cohorts) that enrolled 904 brain-dead individuals. Antioxidant use was associated with a 7.0% reduction in the risk of death [OR 0.93 (0.86; 0.99), P = 0.02], a 27.9% increase in the risk of graft utilization [OR 2.26 (1.10; 4.59), P = 0.03], and a 9.5% increase in the risk of developing acute renal dysfunction [OR 1.65 (1.08; 2.52), P = 0.02]. Treatment with antioxidants significantly reduced the number of patients who developed acute kidney
