Category:Industrial automation Category:Discrete-event simulationThe media has responded with various sentiments to revelations about China's role in the New Zealand mosque attacks, though far fewer journalists have gone to China than to Christchurch to do interviews and write stories. The Guardian published an article about the New Zealand attacks on Tuesday, with a special focus on the suspects and their alleged links with Iran and other issues. A reporter from The Guardian posted the following video of her interview with a man with the surname of Ali. The interview is somewhat unusual because he appears to talk about Beijing and the New Zealand attacks, while simultaneously saying nothing about the New Zealand attack. The interview with Ali was posted on his personal Facebook page on March 15. On this page, he also posted a picture of an item that says, "If you work at Goldman Sachs, you work for the devil. If you work at Goldman Sachs, you work for Satan. Goldman Sachs = Hell." Ali told The Guardian that the picture was from an "anti-imperialist conference." The Global Times, a newspaper known for its unabashed support of China's Communist Party and the government, published an article on Tuesday critical of the New Zealand attacker. The article on the Global Times website has no byline, but the article is signed "An anonymous reader" and "Global Times" appears at the end of the article as an author. The article, which has only about 1,000 views, writes that the mosque attacks are an example of "the rampant atrocities" committed by the "enemy within" that has developed after 200 years of Western influence and attempted "seeding reforms" of Muslims in Europe and the U.S. In the last year, the Global Times has published various articles about the Chinese Muslim Uyghur minority that many see as a top threat.
