Sleep deprivation may also result in increased metabolism of nutrients because of the restricted time available for eating. In fact, during the first 24 hours after sleep deprivation, gastric evacuation takes place at a lower rate than usual. The use of a lower than usual body weight to estimate the amount of nutrients ingested can mask the deficiencies induced by a restriction in sleep, and it can be viewed as a limitation of this study, which only addressed the effects of short periods of restricted sleep. In conclusion, this study demonstrated that sleep deprivation for 24 hours in adult male rats produced an

I'm also attempting to use custom memory allocation using the operator new[] method, but I'm concerned about what happens when I call the vector::data() method. My worries are as follows: I assume that I will need to initialize the new[] called memory before using it, but how? I also assume that I won't be able to use the uninitialized memory in the vectors' data member. Does that mean that I will need to create a vector object (dummy test) and then copy the objects into the new[] location? If so, why and how could I implement this? Here is what I have so far: #include "stdafx.h" class SafeVector: public
