Inhibition of Ca2+ uptake and ATPase activity in rat and rabbit small intestine by propargyl alcohol. The effect of propargyl alcohol on in vitro Ca2+ uptake and ATPase activity was tested in longitudinal and circular muscle strips of rat jejunum and in preparations from rabbit jejunum and ileum. It was found that, in vitro, the addition of 0.5 mM propargyl alcohol to the incubation medium inhibited calcium uptake by all types of preparations tested. The inhibitory effect of propargyl alcohol was dose-dependent and could be prevented by co-addition of 300 mM propargyl alcohol. This inhibitory effect was reversible. The inhibitory effect was clearly specific for calcium since [3H]propargyl alcohol, which was added to the incubation medium in order to metabolize propargyl alcohol, did not significantly affect Ca2+ uptake. Addition of propargyl alcohol had no effect on the ATPase activity of the preparations.The Biggest Birdhouse of all time – It's the roof On our homepage you can see the five biggest birdhouses of all time . Q: Create SQLite database in background and restore it upon returning to application I have an application that calls SQLiteOpenHelper which uses a database. I need to be able to create the database in the background and restore it upon the app being called. Currently it create it. I am not sure what to do to restore it. @Override public void onCreate(SQLiteDatabase db) { super.onCreate(db); Log.i(TAG, "onCreate"); db.execSQL(TABLE_NAME); Log.i(TAG, "new record added"); } A: If you want to create a database in the background then you need to use SQLiteOpenHelper and the method createOrOpenDatabase. To restore the data, you can use this method to open your SQLite database. You can use the global variable database which is an SQLiteDatabase object. To add a new record in the database you can call: SQLiteDatabase db = this.getWritableDatabase(); long id = db.insert(TABLE_NAME, null, values); db.close(); return id; To read from your database, you can call: SQLiteDatabase db = this.getWritableDatabase(); cursor = db.query(TABLE_NAME, valuesColumns, null, null, null, null, null); if(cursor!=null && cursor.moveToFirst()){ //do something } db.close(); But please note that this is only one way to do this. Autoradiographic and immunochemical study of peptide-containing nerve terminals and glial cells in rat spinal cord: I. Hypoglossal nucleus. In the hypoglossal nucleus, a dense plexus of silver grains was observed in subnucleus interpolaris (i.e., pars interpolaris). The silver grains were thought to label peptide-containing nerve terminals that project to the nucleus and are known to be localized in this region. Double immunostaining revealed that the silver grains in the nerve terminals were attributed to calcitonin gene-related peptide-like immunoreactivity.
