these individuals would be responsible for transporting the victim to the scene of the crime. Of course, we can imagine other people involved who might have been charged with that crime. Surely, the trial courts will be able to designate the person who is best suited to testify against those persons responsible for her death. The two other proposed defenses rest on the defense attorneys' ability to convince the jurors that this girl would have lived had she been able to be taken to a hospital. One defense attorney would say that the "dark alley" extended into the parking lot. The other defense attorney would say that the victim had abused her mother. It is easy to conceive of many other situations in which the defenses could be offered and the jurors could weigh and assess them. The charge to the jury in this case was not sufficient to inform the jurors what actions of the defendant would be a defense. It is likely that the court left the burden of proof as to these defenses to the jury.
