Myths About Photoshop The point of this article is not to belittle Photoshop or every Photoshop user, but it's time to correct several myths about this powerful tool. Myth: Photoshop is a collection of tools. When you're working with layers, you might think of Photoshop as a collection of modules that can be manipulated to create any number of images. You can select tools at the top of your Photoshop workspace and customize them. It's called the toolbox. This lets you run a series of tools on a single page or work on many pages at once. It's not a toolbox, but an image-making application. Myth: Photoshop will overwrite an image you've saved. Adobe Photoshop doesn't automatically overwrite an image when you edit it. You have to save the file. You can use a new name that's different from the original image, but you need to save the file before you edit the new image. In some programs you can save in a single action (like "Save As") or in a series of actions (like "Save for Web"). With Photoshop, you have to use Save As in the File menu or right-click on the image file, then choose Save from the menu. Myth: You can only save in RGB. You can save in any color space: RGB, CMYK or any other color space supported by Photoshop. You can also run a color checker in any color space. Myth: The View menu has only one menu option: Zoom. View menus can have more than one menu option: Zoom, Zoom Percent, Fit, View Fit, Pan, Fit to Page, Fit to Window and Zoom to Fit. The Zoom menu, which is usually chosen with the space bar, enables you to zoom in on your image. Myth: It's easier to edit an image using layers than using the lasso tool. When you use layers, you work on the entire image at once. You can select and modify any part of the image and then use the layers to hide areas you don't want to modify or modify them later. With layers you can create a series of overlays and blend the layers to achieve effects you can't get with the lasso tool. You can also use the lasso tool to select and then drag an area of pixels, to create a selection. You can move and edit selections by pressing the left and right arrows on your keyboard. You don't

I enjoy words, people, the little things in life and the bigger things. I never stop learning, never stop teaching and never stop trying to encourage other women to follow their dreams...whatever those may be! This is my first time here but I'm a bit of a crafty person. ## What's New In?

The security forces in Kashmir are “waging a war against a war”, as an elaborate plan is being hatched to oust the elected government in the state in response to its rejection of the centre’s ultimatum on Jammu and Kashmir’s special status, The Indian Express has learnt. The separatists claim that they will go ahead with their plans for an uprising on August 4 after the sunset of Article 35A of the constitution, which reserves to Jammu and Kashmir a special status that allows the state “a special status in the Union”. Sources said the armed forces have been keeping the situation under watch to prevent plans being implemented, as on August 4, a general strike will be called across the valley, with the area witnessing an outbreak of violence for the first time. The centre has clearly understood the separatists’ plan to trigger an incident. As a precautionary measure, the state’s special status has been scrapped, the centre has imposed restrictions in the state, and the security forces have been told not to allow anyone access to the Valley without “force”. Bans on movement of people between the different parts of the Valley have been imposed, and the Armed Forces (Special Powers) Act (AFSPA) was not withdrawn on August 4 as the state government asked. On May 13, five weeks after the centre stripped Jammu and Kashmir of its special status, and the governor’s rule was imposed in the state, Peoples Democratic Party (PDP) chief Mehbooba Mufti was formally elected as the chief minister of the state.
