--Amazing animation! --Epic-sounding sad music!
--I like that it throws up the debate on whether Julius Caesar, in the very first lines of the play, gets stabbed in the head, or makes a statement on himself by making the knife-wielder, Brutus, go up to the crowd, pause for a while, before drawing the blade across his own throat, half making a joke, and half announcing his own political suicide! --Some VERY funny dialogue!
--Top of the things! About The Game Paper Shakespeare (Ancient): --Awesome flowcharts that explain the rules of the game --Awesome animations! --At the start of the game, you must decide your allegiance (of the Roman empire). Either follow the way of the Crown or the People, and watch the famous play of violence play out through the POV of one of the most respected men of his time. Or you could indeed join the military camp of the People and actually try and become emperor for yourself! --Being a Roman citizen, you will also have to decide how to treat the defeated Roman general. Either you can kill him, or you can spare his life. At this point in the game, you will have noticed that you are presented with 6 options: SPARE THE LIFE OF THE GENERAL; KILL THE GENERAL; GIVE THE GENERAL A FREE PASS; KILL THE VICTIMS; FREE THE PRISONERS; KILL ALL THE PEOPLE. --Paper Shakespeare is an original, fun simulation game that will make you think. It is not a typical simulation game, such as a CIVILIZATION or SPAWN 3000-esque game. It takes a more political and historical approach, and will test your knowledge of the Roman Empire as well as your ability to make difficult moral decisions.
