References Category:Graphical user interfacesCyclic AMP response element-binding protein (CREB) is a multifunctional protein that plays critical roles in the control of gene expression. CREB is phosphorylated and activated by cyclic AMP-dependent protein kinase (PKA). The structural basis for CREB activation has been recently characterized. In the unphosphorylated form, CREB binds to a CREB-binding protein (CBP)/p300 and associates with histone deacetylase (HDAC). PKA phosphorylates CREB at two serine residues, and both the phosphorylated and unphosphorylated forms of CREB bind CBP/p300. Although CREB and CBP/p300 bind to the same core sequence in the CRE (cAMP response element), the modes of their interactions are different: CREB recruits the HDAC, whereas CBP/p300 activates the CRE-dependent transcription.
