Should we reject suggested edits that will take some time to review? I've seen questions where an edit was suggested which would be a really massive edit and the question would be hard to review. Should an edit be rejected as too minor? A: I don't think that will cause too much trouble. If an edit is really large and obvious, a comment should be left on the question pointing this out. In the same way, if you see a question where an answer is posted that doesn't address some question being asked, you can always vote to close the question. Having said that, I don't think it's useful to automatically block or reject suggested edits just to make sure they are large. It's much better to have the editor posting them discuss their edits with the author. Don't rely on what's posted in the edit summary. If there's no discussion
