What's new in Elden Ring:

No posts in thread In the time of ancient legends, the world was like a blue-green lake, wherein the gods lived in the sunlight. Then the five war gods, or dragons, and the Son of Heaven waged war at the heavens, spewing blood. After the primal gods lost in the fights, embittered they plunged their will into the blood-filled land, shaping it like their dreams. Máximo and Galeras had a dream. They wanted to become big-hearted heroes and conquer different lands. Galeras wanted to go to the west. Máximo just wanted to conquer everything and just drink as much of the blood as he could. But they aren't ready to come back yet. Unknown to the world, Rune, Galeras's closest companion, sat as his silent servant inside his hermit's cave. Standing in the wind, her translucent fingers combing the beaches as her somewhat blood-smeared face gazed to the gray skies. "Do you feel it?" said the wind. "An energy awakening. I feel it. They're coming." She felt everything around her. From the volcanoes to the roiling sea, everything was alive as it was always would be as it would be long after she was dead. An infinite chain of births and deaths, being born and being reborn, causing her to grasp the worldview of Heaven. Galeras stretched as he wondered what awaited in the south. "Let's go, Máximo." He also felt the want for war and so he shook his hand from the depths of his feet to his head, ready to face anything the world could offer him. His fists clenched as he looked forward at the endless sky and he felt his muscles rippling from the determination in his chest. "RUNE! I WANT TO MAKE WAR, I WANT TO MAKE WAR!" Galeras growled while standing up, his eyes glowing with a concentration full of excitement. Rune smiled as she wondered who the new hero was. This was a male and she almost felt dumbfounded at that she didn't know any male, save for her ancient master. Her thoughts were gone in the wind, on the future and on her home. "Rune. We'
