◆ Active Duty Thank you for reading my blog. While I continue to post stories related to the development of Elden Ring, I also intend to blog about the current game every week. I'll do my best not to fail you. I have already written a post outlining the current status of development, and will do my best to avoid repeating myself. Let's go over today's update together. Updates: Development Progress There are currently 35 million characters, and about 85 million words in all three languages. Character creation is still being streamlined.We are proud of the fact that the creation of 1,000 characters is completed. Although crafting weapons is completed, we cannot consider the creation of their skills to be completed until the processing system is finalized. So we are currently researching the process in the art team, to ensure that performance is as good as possible. Because we can verify the quality of the data by hand, debugging is easy, and debugging is now being streamlined into one step. In the same vein, we are using equipment that is easy to use as 'checks'. For example, stats can be identified with 100 points, and equipment can be identified with 1,000 points. These are used in debugging. Our schedule is to complete the system processing by the end of this year, and the finalization of the final version is planned for the last quarter of 2018. When that occurs, we will not require external feedback during the development of the game, and will not need to use the pre-beta version for testing. With this, we can move to the main testing phase as soon as possible. The same goes for the introduction of the content update and the expansion pack. We are now gathering feedback from the development team and the external testers through various channels, but are currently not reaching out to the players. In the future, we intend to offer consultation to individual players through a website and other channels. The current development team consists of about 30 people. The Development Project Team The character creation team is made up of about 14 people, and a designer has already been recruited to provide consultation to the development team. The development team is currently in the process of narrowing down the approval candidates. The development of the systems required to ensure the production of a product with a high quality is ongoing. We
