The game uses the mobile chat system and chatroom feature “GREAT RIOT” for online play. It is expected to undergo real-time conversion to the web based on an agreement with the operators of the service. © 2017 Arc System Works © 2017 The Yamamoto Research Institute<sup>[[@CR8]]</sup> and one South Africa <sup>[[@CR15]]</sup> cohort, we demonstrated that increased axial thickness of retina and choroid occurs as early as the first trimester in various types of congenital US abnormalities. Optic disc pit was the most common type of congenital US abnormality in our study. Retinal and subretinal cyst occurred more frequently in comparison with other studies, which may be attributed to the later gestational age in our study, as the secondary changes of fetal optic nerve development and optic disc formation continue from at least 12 and 6 weeks of gestation, respectively <sup>[[@CR16], [ @CR17]]</sup>. A strong association was detected between the presence of an optic disc pit and leukocoria, such as localized hyperpigmentation and pallor of the anterior surface of the lens <sup>[[@CR16], [ @CR18]]</sup>. Some investigators found that hypoplasia or agenesis of the optic nerve was associated with the development of the optic disc pit. However, this association was not confirmed in this study. This observation might be attributed to the relatively small sample size of eyes with a punctate optic disc anomaly and the difficulty of localization and diagnosis. Another important finding of this study was the association between choroidal thickness of more than 2 mm and retinochoroidal abnormalities detected at fetal US. Some studies have suggested that a size-dependent effect of choroid exists in utero and that the choroid thickens in response to increased distance to the fetal retina \[[@CR10]-[@CR12], [@CR19]\]. This enlargement of the choroid was detected to be more pronounced at 8--9 weeks of gestation. In a study by Touw et al. \[[@CR20]\], at 5.9 mm from the fetal eyes, the choroidal thickness was 4.5 mm in fetuses with abnormal fetal vasculature and 3.4 mm in normal fetuses. All the patients with optical disc anomalies in this study presented with choroidal thickness of

Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg has been a visible figure in the fight against structural racism, particularly in the criminal justice system. At the recent SXSW festival in Texas she spoke of the arrest of her teenage cousin at a Jim Crow-era drive-in theatre. Knowing that racial injustice affected him her as their cousin, she spoke about her own experiences of false arrest, wrongful accusation and mistreatment. This personal connection to the justice system's treatment of black and Latino people is an important reason to support her nomination, but Ginsburg's experience is not unique. Get familiar. Read all the articles in the series. Check out the bib. Visit EvidenceNetwork.org to get started. Featured on the website, in this roundup are articles by Ginsburg, new members of the court, and legal academics and practitioners at leading institutions and public interest organizations. The articles were selected based on their quality, innovation and timely relevance to the nomination. A full summary with links to the articles can be found here. In our first piece, SF Weekly's Tamara Draut explores the ongoing fight by United Van Lines — a moving company — for inclusion of the LGBT community as a protected class: But the protections, the company argues, unfairly single out certain vulnerable groups. "Some 'protected classes' — like race, religion, national origin and gender — are clearly not enjoyed by everyone," its lawyers write in court filings. "United's policy of excluding gays from housing benefits goes too far." Of the five justices up for the seat of retiring justice Anthony Kennedy, three are straight or married and two are women. In our second article, P.L. Yu, a scholar at the American Enterprise Institute, explains the
