LaTeX is written entirely in plain text files, and you can read the files directly by typing them into a browser window. One of the most exciting things about using LaTeX is that you don't have to worry about how an editor converts source text to images. Instead, LaTeX typesets text from the source text directly, and the result is an image. This means that you'll have to write a text file, not an image. Getting started with LaTeX Before we get started, we'll look at installing LaTeX. If you want to use any of the fonts that were included in the zip, you'll need to install Adobe's PDF fonts. Note that these fonts come in a different format than the ones that you're used to installing on your computer, so you'll need to install Adobe Reader for Windows or Mac. On Mac, these fonts are included by default in applications like Preview, and on Windows, you can download them from Adobe. Installing on Ubuntu For a one-click method of installing LaTeX on Ubuntu or other Debian-based systems, you can use Ubuntu Tweak's "Editor" tab. Press Alt+F2 to bring up a run window, and type "Ubuntu Tweak". Ubuntu Tweak is a graphical interface to many system settings. Once it's running, press Alt+F2 again and type "TeX Live". Ubuntu Tweak should already be installed, and you'll see the following window: With Ubuntu Tweak's "Editor" tab selected, click the + sign on the top left of the window, and go to the "Other" section. There are several packages that need
