Bangladeshi author Taslima Nasreen has reportedly been forced to leave the country after a Dhaka court charged her with insulting the national anthem during a speech on 20 February. Nasreen, the author of "Lajja", a book which is critical of Islam, was invited by students of Holy Rosary University, to talk at a public forum to mark the publication of a collection of her essays. Nasreen, who runs a refuge for women escaping abuse in Bangladesh, was reportedly heckled and ordered to leave the venue by the university's security team before the speech. The public address went ahead. The court charged Nasreen with insulting the anthem of the country, Taslima Nasrin. Reporter: AFP Police, who were escorting Nasreen, then seized the books she had brought into the venue. A police official, however, told Reuters that Nasreen was not arrested. Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, who was also present at the public event, made the decision to cancel the controversial author's visa, according to the head of the country's High Court, Abdul Muneer Khan. Nasreen had applied for a new one last week, but this was not approved. "It is not lawful to book a foreign author before he or she is in the country," Khan said. A court ruling in Dhaka had initially rejected Nasreen's bid to get her visa renewed, Reuters reports. Nasreen was arrested in 1990 and sentenced to one year in prison for "defaming Islam" in her writings. She was then barred from publishing in Bangladesh for four years, until recently. During the same speech, she said that she was confident that she would win the case. "I am not alone. I have many supporters in this country and many of my friends are also here," said Nasreen. Nasreen was not put in a prison, however, according to the Bangladeshi court. "I was not sent to a prison. I was put in the judicial remand centre. But the judgment was not sent to me," the author said.
