to establish normal values and variations in hematologic and sickling parameters in dogs with naturally occurring hemolytic anemia. These parameters included PCV, red blood cell (RBC) number, concentration, and index; plasma sodium, potassium, chloride, and carbon dioxide concentrations; and plasma pH. Sickling curves were obtained for each sample. In 37 of 78 dogs with hematologic abnormalities, the target platelet and RBC values for normal dogs were achieved. However, the mean observed platelet counts were below the target value. In 12 of 17 animals with hypergammaglobulinemia, the observed mean plasma immunoglobulin G concentration was below the target value. The authors' findings suggest that the nonhematologic status of dogs with naturally occurring hemolytic anemia may have contributed to the deceptively normal hematologic values recorded in many dogs. They recommend that hematologic and serum biochemical values be evaluated on the basis of the nonhematologic status of each dog. In addition, dogs with hypergammaglobulinemia should be evaluated for a dysglobulinemia. Vancouver Island's tallest driver just got taller. Tim Richards has become the tallest driver in North America — and possibly the world — with his 2.32 metres. He topped out at 203 centimetres today at the BMO Centre in Victoria, which makes him only two centimetres taller than the 2.7-metre high arch of the Saskatchewan Legislature. "I was quite surprised, honestly," said the 32-year-old, who grew up in Vernon, B.C. He took his height in stride, joking about how there's a party going on inside his head. He noted in an interview he's always been the tallest person in the room. He weighed in at 115 pounds on the day of the record-setting accomplishment. The previous tallest driver in North America was 2.32 metres tall, set by Dave Field in 1989. Richards was born without fibulae, the protruding bones in his legs. He has no fibulae in
