The song is a male version of the girl's song of the same name and is about a man crushing on his classmate. The girl in this song is named Houra, and while she's my absolute favorite singer, I'm not exactly crazy about how the song sounds. I don't want to bash the song, but I'm not quite as fond of Ami's voice as others are (and I love the fact that she's doing J-pop here, which generally makes me cringe). Download this song, check out some other Ami songs, and tell us how much you love Ami on the forums! Update: Some of our J-pop readers have pointed out that this is the same song from the CD that is being released in North America as "Honey Bunny". In a sense, I guess that's true, as that's the one I was thinking of. But in a larger sense, the song just feels more interesting to me when I know it's not the thing they are releasing in the U.S. (I think only the short version on the CD and the version that is streaming on the bandcamp are actually English). Regardless, the song is the same song and I think it's fun to watch the band master this one! After all, it's not like I want to break down J-pop fans or say they're bad. I'm just trying to make you listen to these songs! ;D That was a lie. The truth is that we're never going to stop listening to J-Pop. And even if the rest

I'm following the tutorial here: At the end of the chat_client.cpp I have: // send conversation to the user channel_x->send(channel_y->recv()); And in the chat_manager class I have a method to do this: void chat_manager::publish_to_user(channel_x_t x, channel_y_t y) { conversation_t conversation(x, y); // TODO: publish conversation to user } But it's not working. Could you help me understand what is the problem? Thanks, A: channel_x->send(channel_y->recv()); That will attempt to send the content of a channel_x object to the content of a channel_y object. channel_x is going to be a connection (you define it as such), channel_y is going to be a queue (as you declare it as such) but they are different things. They have different "data types". To send the "content" of channel_x to the content of channel_y you must use channel_x->send() to send the content of channel_x to the content of channel_y. As an example: #include #include #include boost::asio::io_service ios; boost::asio::ip::tcp::iostream stream(ios); // Declare channel x as a connection to a queue (not a queue like object) boost::asio::ip::tcp::iostream channel_x(stream, tcp::endpoint{boost::asio::ip::tcp::v4(), 1337}); // Declare channel y as a queue (not a connection object) boost::

The addition of purified murine ZP3 (Mur-rZP3) to the medium containing sperm causes the penetration of the egg plasma membrane. By applying a different extracellular matrix protein (Mur-rGST), we have recently established that myeloma cell GST (murine G-protein of the T-cell family) is a zona ligand (Mur-rGST). It attaches to and forms intercellular bridges between target cells or vice versa. The aim of the present study was to investigate whether murine ZP3, murine G-protein or murine ZP2, a murine homolog of human ZP2, is also a ligand for murine sperm and for the murine egg plasma membrane. Murine ZP3, murine G-protein, or murine ZP2 added to the medium containing sperm caused sperm-egg plasma membrane fusion of mouse oocytes at sublytic concentrations (5-15 pM). The fusion activity of murine ZP3 was inhibited by pepsin treatment. The fusion activity of recombinant human ZP3 (rhuZP3) was the same as that of murine ZP3. These findings suggest that murine ZP3, murine G-protein and murine ZP2 are essential for sperm-egg plasma membrane fusion. We conclude that natural murine ZP3, murine G-protein and murine ZP2 are zona ligands (zona-derived sperm-binding molecule) for murine sperm and a zona ligand (zona-derived sperm-binding molecule) for murine oocyte plasma membrane.Evaluation of a rapid antigen detection assay for Chlamydia trachomatis.
