Those are the main reasons why many people do not believe that in the future Bitcoin will be inflationary. This is a good point, but there are other reasons. Bitcoin is not another minting system, it is not like gold. It is not a scarce commodity. In this post we are going to discuss 5 different myth regarding Bitcoin and its future. Mining is Dead Mining is not dead, it is just few years old. In the future there will be more and more people trying to mine, because they are going to be rewarded by the hard work that they are doing. For example if we consider "Blockchain", all the miners are trying to mine it. Some people are doing it for the love of the game, because they are interested in the technology, others are doing it because they are going to be rewarded. Mining will always be around, so it will not be dead in the future. Bitcoin Mining is expensive Bitcoin mining is expensive, if we consider a typical computer based bitcoin miner, is a video card. Usually it is able to mine bitcoin for 1.5-2 months. Some people have been also able to mine more than 3 months. Mining is also more profitable if we consider that the last block reward is 50 BTC, and you are willing to mine 0.25 BTC. In the future there will be more miners using better hardware. Mining is not expensive, if you consider the cost of electricity used to power the computer and the bitcoin miner. Bitcoin mining will be decentralized Bitcoin is not a decentralized system. Bitcoin is an open source code, not a centralized system. In fact Bitcoin does not have an owner. Bitcoin is a distributed network and it is more decentralized than a centralized system. In a decentralized system there is no single point of failure. If you lose all your Bitcoins, you are still able to mine. The Bitcoin network is not a single line of code. Anyone can check the code and see if it works or not. It is more like a distributed network and it is decentralized. However the mining community, has a common goal to help the network grow, so it is not a single line of code. The bitcoin network is a group of people, more like a democratic system, where many people are in charge. In a democratic system the group is more likely to make a decision, due to the individual views of each member. There is a centralized authority in charge of 05a79cecff

Q: Testing if a column in a table contains certain values I'm creating a trigger that should catch those records in a table that has a specific value in a particular column. I have 3 columns in a table, the id, the name and a flag in the name column. I need to run a query that will return only those records where "Test" exists in the name column. If nothing is found there, I need to return all of them as usual. So far I have this: SELECT a.id, a.name, (a.name!= '') as 'Test' FROM some_table a WHERE a.name LIKE 'Test' Is there a better way to do this? A: You can just use IN: SELECT a.id, a.name, (a.name LIKE 'Test') as 'Test' FROM some_table a WHERE a.name IN ('Test', 'Whatever', 'Other') Using LIKE with strings other than "" means you can use wildcards in the strings. You might want to use EXISTS if you want to avoid testing the empty string cases: SELECT a.id, a.name, (EXISTS (SELECT 1 FROM some_table c WHERE c.name = 'Test')) as 'Test' FROM some_table a WHERE EXISTS (SELECT 1 FROM some_table c WHERE c.name = 'Test') The EXISTS() syntax is available only since SQL Server 2012. If you're using an earlier version, you can use a correlated subquery: SELECT a.id, a.name, 1 AS 'Test' FROM some_table a WHERE a.name = 'Test' OR EXISTS (SELECT 1 FROM some_table c WHERE c.name = 'Test') or: SELECT a.id, a.name, (SELECT 1 FROM some_table c WHERE c.name = 'Test') as 'Test' FROM some_table a Since you're mentioning the other values, I assume you want to find all rows where the name is not 'Test'. You can use a NOT EXISTS: SELECT a.id, a.name, (NOT EXISTS (SELECT 1 FROM some_table c

The proposed training program of the Dartmouth Center on the Social and Ethical Issues in Mental Health Services is designed to train a new cadre of mental health care and social policy analysts with the appropriate training and research skills to serve as catalysts for policy change in mental health services in this country. The curriculum aims to develop a theoretical framework in which to understand, analyze and critique mental health policies, practices and programs in an environment of service delivery, financing, quality assurance, rights, consumer advocacy, and consumer protection. In addition, the curriculum provides training in the design, implementation and evaluation of complex social policy research studies in an ethical manner. The training program is comprised of a basic core curriculum that begins with a focus on social policy and the philosophy, theory and methods of qualitative and quantitative research in the social sciences; then, we build upon this foundation by providing a background in the philosophy, theory and methods of assessment and evaluation of mental health programs; and finally, we wrap up with a focus on mental health policy and service delivery. The trainees enter our program at the graduate student level, but are prepared at the postdoctoral level by the faculty of the Social Science Research Training program at the Dartmouth Institute for Health Policy and Clinical Practice. Training is carried out within the framework of the Department of Social Relations at Dartmouth, which is at the forefront of the study of social policy and mental health. Moreover, the diversity of the faculty and programs within the Department of Social Relations generates an exceptional environment for training in research, prevention, and policy relevant to mental health services.
