(KELLY MUELLER PHOTOS) The number of jobs created by Pennsylvania's schools in 2017 is nearly equal to the 7,000 people the County lost due to the downturn of the coal industry. That is according to a study released Tuesday by the Institute for Economic Advancement at Rosemont College. The institute found that the educational sector's community benefits spending — which is the sum of collective bargaining pay, job training, apprenticeship and tuition reimbursements — added $2.3 billion in economic activity to Allegheny County in 2017. The amount is 1.3 percent of the county's economic output. The report says that, collectively, the 120 school districts and charter schools had a total of 2,477 jobs created — paying approximately $1.7 million in salaries and benefits per year. That compares with the 7,030 jobs lost to the county due to the downturn of the coal industry and, according to the study, "the loss of 400 steel workers in the region." Q: google maps api key I'm working with google maps api. I have a problem: when I run my program the map loads OK (only an error appears if I go offline) but later on, in other parts of my program, when trying to run another component that needs to get the location of the user, I get an exception: System.InvalidOperationException: Property or indexer 'Google.Maps.Search.ResultSet.Contains' cannot be assigned to -- it is read only. I've looked it up and this seems to be an issue with running 2 programs against the same google api key. So, I don't know how to fix that... anyone can help me on this, please? A: The answer you got in the comments is a valid one. The exception you get sounds like you are trying to access a property of the google api key that you are not supposed to access. The idea is that you are using the api key to access a google server and not your program code. By looking at the exception you posted, it is clear that you are using the google.maps.places.PlacesService class, and try to use its properties. You can put your code into a static function and give your api key as parameter for that function, in order to get a new instance of the api key. This also answers your question about why the changes you are taking at runtime are not reflected into the map. The api key defines what kind of instance is created so you cant change the api key without using the same kind of instance. Main Menu RTSB: Chengdu Vice Mayor Suffers Coronavirus On March 6, Chengdu's Wu Xianwei was diagnosed with the coronavirus, marking the first time a Chinese official has contracted the infectious respiratory illness.
