THz wave with a frequency range of 0.1 to 2.0 THz is in same frequency range as that of mid-infrared (MIR) wave, with wavelength ranging from 0.6 μm to 1.2 μm, and can penetrate deeper into material and be reflected or refracted by materials, thus being capable of penetrating material defects, such as cracks and pores, and detecting the fluid condition, crystalline quality, component identification and conformational changes in and on the material, and even differentiating materials with similar spectrums. Therefore, THz spectroscopy can be used in many fields of high-tech industries to produce high-tech products, in electronic security areas to detect the counterfeit goods, and in the forensic field to judge the manner of offense. Terahertz electric field has nonlinear properties in low-level fields, and the frequency of the terahertz wave will be significantly increased or decreased with a high intensity of the terahertz field. A higher frequency means a more powerful electric field, and the frequency of the laser field is usually converted to that of the terahertz wave by using a nonlinear crystal, so

Let $A\subseteq X$. Then A is compact iff A is closed and bounded. I know that a bounded set is compact if and only if it is closed and bounded, and a subset is closed iff it is closed for each one of its images under the closure operator. And obviously $A\subseteq B$ implies that A is closed for each subset B of X. If A is a closed set and X is locally compact, then A is compact. I only have problems with the converse implication. If X is a locally compact Hausdorff space,
