This website serves as a b.Ultrasonic scaling is well known in the art for the removal of plaque, tartar and calculus from teeth. Scaling compositions are generally available as either a liquid or a paste form. Pastes are typically thickened using amorphous water soluble polymeric materials to produce the consistency of a tooth paste. However, it is difficult to prepare the particular consistency of the paste dental products of the prior art because they generally tend to dry and clump up, forming insoluble aggregates which are difficult to handle. Further, the insoluble aggregates tend to be uncomfortable in use for the patient. One approach to dealing with the problems of clumping of the paste is disclosed in U.S. Pat. Nos. 2,731,400 and 2,731,402. These patents disclose a paste dental product prepared by the incorporation of an aqueous suspension of polymers which are insoluble in the dental product, but which are capable of dissolving or gelling upon the addition of water to give a paste-like consistency. These polymers may be solid in a dehydrated state, such as sodium alginate, or they may be in a soluble form, such as poly(vinylamine) hydrochloride, for example. U.S. Pat. No. 3,897,791 discloses an improvement in the paste dental products of the above-noted patents wherein a suspension of alginate is mixed with a solubilizing agent, such as a polyhydric alcohol, in the presence of a polyvalent metal ion to give a paste-like consistency. The dental product of the U.S. Pat. No. 3,897,791 is characterized by having a maximum of 1 part by weight of the solubilizing agent per part by weight of the alginate, and the paste is essentially non-gelling. Although the dental products of U.S. Pat. Nos. 3,897,791 and 2,731,400 work well, care must be taken not to use a quantity of the solubilizing agent which will precipitate or clump the suspension, since this will result in a product which is difficult to use.
