Description: SCP-1999-J is a carved stone sculpture which possesses the powers of shadow puppetry, as well as the ability to manipulate shadows at random, and no individual shadow can be seen or heard. Details of how this works are unknown, although one effect which is observed is that a bystander will no longer see a shadow cast, but instead become aware that a shadow is present. All shadow manipulation is performed through the living person in front of the sculpture, although SCP-1999-J appears to be aware of what the person is doing, and specifically what they are going to do. The subject has no control over the shadow's actions, which appears as the shadows take the appropriate form and move in accordance with the movement of their legs, head, hands, etc. The shadows appear to possess the will and personality of the person causing them to move, although they do not appear to affect the subject in any way. The effects of SCP-1999-J are only observed when the subject is within 3 metres of it. It is currently unknown why this object is located in containment in the main base. Addendum: SCP-1999-J was discovered by security personnel during a routine patrol of the western wing of Site-88. The placement of this object in containment was deliberate, and the location, despite its proximity to a stairwell, is believed to be safe from all known threats. Item #: SCP-1999-J Object Class: Safe Special Containment Procedures: As SCP-1999-J does not fall outside the current Containment Procedures, they will remain as standard procedures. Description: SCP-1999-J is a carved wooden sculpture which possesses the powers of shadow puppetry
