Image copyright Getty Images The BBC's Beeb has said it is considering what "adjustments" to the licence fee it needs to make to "meet licence fee and service payer requirements". The corporation's chairman Lord Patten said the need for changes had been highlighted following years of declining TV and radio audiences. The BBC also said there was little more it could do to raise revenue from licence fee payers. The government has been examining the BBC's funding model, and is due to publish a green paper later this year. In a speech delivered at the Edinburgh International Television Festival, Lord Patten told the event: "The licence fee is currently the only funding source for the BBC, though without doubt it is under significant pressure given the ongoing reduction in its funding. "There is no funding institution in the world that has grown its audience in three decades and reduced its audience in the same time." 'Growth' Lord Patt
