costliest storm on record, and hit land as a Category 5 hurricane. Hurricane Irma (Photo: News Dog Media) Irma, the strongest Atlantic hurricane on record, had maximum sustained winds of 185 miles per hour (298 kilometers per hour) on Saturday. Even after the storm weakened, it continued to rake over Sint Maarten, before it hit the Caribbean islands of Antigua and Barbuda, and the Dutch islands of Curacao and Sint Eustatius, before heading out to open sea. The storm caused at least 46 deaths, with the vast majority of casualties coming from the Dutch overseas territory of Sint Maarten, Dutch officials said. All Dutch citizens on Sint Maarten, and on the other Dutch Caribbean territories, are being instructed to leave the islands immediately. Although expected to weaken, Irma is now forecast to cause over $1.5 billion in damage by the time it reaches open sea. The Dutch city of Amsterdam is preparing for the arrival of the storm. Residents in the city center have been told to leave their homes, while other areas of the city have been closed to traffic. The city is already at a certain level of preparedness, but it has been warned to brace for damage, though only minor by comparison. "We're well prepared, but after a category 5 hurricane, the risks are very high," one local official told Dutch broadcaster RTL Nieuws. At least 12 people have died in the Caribbean since Hurricane Irma struck the region. The storm has also killed around 4,000 people in the Philippines, the National Disaster Risk Reduction and Management Council (NDRRMC) said. Irma also wrecked the island of Barbuda, as well as knocking out power and communication systems on Antigua, and displacing hundreds of people. HGVM says 2,000 homes have been damaged (likely meaning lost / lost their roofs) and tens of thousands of people have been left without
