I have a table with three columns ID, values and alarm_ids. The first one is the primary key and the other two are foreign keys to tables that have foreign keys themselves. The alarm_ids are a list of the alarm that triggered these values, which are, in turn, a list of IDs of the sensors that have triggered the values. The problem is, I have 10 alarms that can trigger values, but sometimes those values are triggered by more than one alarm, and sometimes some values can be triggered by more than one sensor. I want to delete all values from the table where there is no alarm_id for that value, so a given row will have all alarms that have values in the values column and no alarm_id in the alarm_ids column, regardless of how many sensors a given alarm has. A visual example: ID Value Alarm_id -------------------------- 20 9 1,2,5 22 6 4,5 23 7 3,8,9 First, all rows that have alarm_id = 4 are deleted. As a result of this, there are no values for row 4. Second, because there are no values for alarms 1 and 2, the values for row 5 are deleted. The final result should be: ID Value
