Roblox is a free game development and play platform that has become a popular site for creating a variety of games. Players can build a game and play it in three different ways. Through the "Build" mode, users create games using a drag-and-drop interface. Through the "Play" mode, users can test and play games built by others. Through the "Playground" mode, users can play user-created games with up to three other players. The most popular genres of games include city builders and match-three puzzles. Generally, players must pay for Robux through microtransactions to unlock certain objects or abilities, which are required to build games or to increase the enjoyment of games. Robux can be purchased using real money or using Robux earned in in-game challenges. Unlike other games that offer microtransactions, Roblox does not offer timed trials and uses a policy of continuous availability. Roblox has a policy of not restricting players from playing even dangerous content, such as a policy that allows players to build and play games that allow the player to shoot or attack others. In addition to microtransactions, Roblox has also been criticized for its use of advertising as a revenue source. Many players dislike this aspect of the game because it interrupts gameplay, and Roblox has received criticism for prioritizing revenue over user experience. There are alternative versions of the site that have been criticized for policies that are more aligned with those of a social network. Roblox is an online game platform and game creation system developed by Roblox Corporation that allows users to program games and play games created by other users. Created by David Baszucki and Erik Cassel in 2004 and released in 2006, the platform hosts user-created games of multiple genres coded in the programming language Lua. For most of Roblox's history, it was relatively small, both as a platform and a company. Roblox began to grow rapidly in the second half of the 2010s, and this growth has been accelerated by the COVID-19 pandemic. Roblox is free to play, with in-game purchases available through a virtual currency called Robux. As of August 2020, Roblox had over 164 million monthly active users, including more than half of all American children under 16. Although Roblox has received generally positive reviews from critics, it has faced criticism for its moderation, microtransactions, and exploitative practices directed toward children. I just went to the beta site for work, Workplace, to ask a question about how to deal with a manager who has asked for subordinates to be left alone for a management meeting. I asked about this and a couple other related questions, including whether or not it is appropriate to leave in the meeting for more than one hour. The question has attracted five votes to close as a duplicate. When I asked about what my question was a duplicate of, I was told "This question has been asked many times already." It's not a dupe if "This question has been asked many times already." What is it about this question that is causing it to be marked as a duplicate?
