A: Thanks to @DarinDimitrov, I figured out that using the -b flag (--batch-interactive) works to identify all the running processes in a bash script. The reason the script doesn't work is because the -b flag requires a newline at the end of the arguments. Here is the new script I used to identify the programs running on my computer: `#!/bin/bash if ps aux > /dev/null; then for i in $(ps aux | grep -E "[a-z]{4}\.exe$" | grep -v grep); do echo $i; done elif ps aux > /dev/null; then if ps aux | grep -E "[a-z]{4}\.exe$" >/dev/null; then for i in $(ps aux | grep -E "[a-z]{4}\.exe$" | grep -v grep); do echo $i; done else echo "No running applications found." fi fi` Q: How can I use `mysql_real_escape_string()` in a PHP class How can I use `mysql_real_escape_string()` in a PHP class? I want to store quotes and double quotes in a column of a table, but not that they really are to be used. I tried to do it like this: `/ * mysql_real_escape_string() function * * Escapes MySQL string for use in an SQL statement. The amount of escaping done is determined by the value of the escape character. * * @param string $sql * @return string */`
