Q: as3: Generic Class and flash.display.* in AS3 I have a class which reads data from a MySQL database through PHP/Javascript. This class is called from a swf created in Flash. This class returns a data set which holds data like Image ID, Image Height etc. for the SWF to use. I am creating a new instance of the class, and using it's public variables to extract the data and display it. Since the class doesn't have the methods of flash.display.*, there are no errors thrown when the flash is loaded. The only thing that i'm not sure of is, when the class data is loaded from the SWF, how will that data be considered? My understanding is, when a class is instantiated (private var imageData:ExampleClass = new ExampleClass()), it becomes a copy of the class. But if I put values in the constructor of ExampleClass, and then load data (loadDataFromDB()), will that data be considered? How do I access the data from the MySQL database through PHP/Javascript to create an instance of the class, and then display it in Flash? A: Since it is a copy, you can modify the copy. However, you'll have to make sure that you either remove the data after you've finished with it, or you'll have to make sure that the data you've pulled into the copy is removed when it is done being used. Q: Relating the sinusoidal and linear wave solution on the circle I am reading a text and came across an explanation for the solution of Laplace's equation where the waves are solutions of a unit circle. By "complex result" I mean that the real part was a solution of a circle whose radius was twice the real part. Is this statement valid? What is the explanation for this? A: You will find the proof of this result in most books on ODE (or PDE) or special functions ( 6d1f23a050
