cancer. Recurrence of breast cancer is commonly associated with metastatic disease. Despite surgical resection of the primary lesion, patients occasionally suffer from a recurrence in the absence of clinically detectable metastatic disease. In this report, the authors reviewed the clinical, histologic, and pathologic findings of 87 patients with solitary recurrence of breast cancer. The authors determined that solitary recurrence is a distinct clinical entity, in contrast to multifocal (multicentric) breast cancer, which implies a high probability of metastasis. However, there are pitfalls in pathologic differential diagnosis between a recurrence and a second primary tumor. These patients often present with a benign or borderline histologic lesion at a second recurrence. Three of the 87 patients in the present series had recurrent disease in the absence of clinically detectable metastatic disease at presentation. Both patients with lymphovascular invasion were negative for ER. Two of the 3 patients were negative for PR.
Patients who have recurrent breast cancer with gross or microscopic evidence of lymphovascular invasion, a known negative ER, a known negative PR, and a characteristic histology (lobular, micropapillary, or cribriform) should be considered for in situ therapy or primary chemotherapy. To avoid the deleterious effect of excessive therapy, negative breast receptors should be confirmed by bone marrow biopsy or aspiration before initiating treatment. La France pèse
