Clough Joseph Penzien. John F. Kelly (poet) John F. Kelly (November 16, 1849 – May 11, 1910) was an Irish-born American poet and journalist. He was for many years a member of the staff of the New York Tribune. Biography Kelly was born in Clonmultin, County Offaly, Ireland, the third of the ten children of James Kelly, a small farmer. His father died when he was still a boy, and in 1858, his mother, who owned land in her own right, sent him to live with a cousin in Ballynafeigh, County Cork, where he attended the local national school for two years. In 1864, while visiting relatives in Dundalk, he and his cousin spotted a notice of an American patent for a new kind of textile that was being successfully manufactured in New York City. Because the patent was not yet legal in the United Kingdom and he had not travelled to America in advance, the intended emigration to America proved impossible. Kelly and his cousin, however, were able to obtain enough money to send for their mother, who came and joined them in Ireland. They then set out for England, where he found employment in a cotton factory. A few months later, however, a change of employers allowed him to take up positions as a cobbler and a church parlor keeper. In 1869, at the age of 18, Kelly left Ireland for the United States. He found employment as a printer, but lost that job when he was briefly employed by a newspaper in West Virginia, before he moved to Detroit to accept a job at the Detroit Gazette. He remained in Detroit for five years, finding work as a compositor and a typesetter at the 3e33713323
